

Hereford Hospital

Hereford Hospital is a general service hospital located in the Texas Panhandle near Amarillo. It has served a mainly rural community for many decades.

The Problem

The Texas State Department of Health needed a local office. The Back Clinic had just received a sizeable grant and needed significant square footage. Hereford Hospital had decided they also needed two or three more doctors on staff. Unfortunately, the old main hospital building would not accommodate any of the new offices, so something had to be built quickly. There was also another factor. The hospital's long range planned called for a significantly larger structure to built on the same space within 10 to 15 years. The new building had to be relocatable.

Our Solution

The centerpiece of the new facility is a large centrally located back clinic with very high ceilings, skylights and other touches to make the space as open and bright as possible. Whitley was able, inexpensively, to manufacture the building in our plant and then economically raise the roof on site. The 14,000 square foot building also houses Texas Department of Health offices, and provides space for a number of new doctors and administrators. Whitley, working in close cooperation with Satellite Building Solutions, was also able to design and build the facility so that the modules could be relocated easily accommodate future expansion.
