

About Howe Military Academy

Located east of South Bend, Howe Military has long been the Indiana high school of choice for students preparing for West Point, the Citadel or one of the other military universities. Unfortunately, some tough times had descended upon the school and its sports facilities were in need of modernization and repair.

Their Need

Howe's sports program needed a boost. It had long taken a second position behind academics and personal development. Bleachers were dilapidated and there were no facility for press coverage or video coverage of events. Funding from a combination of sources allowed Howe to move ahead. They demanded a building that would be inexpensive, durable and relatively maintenance free.

Our Solution

The solution was a small building which would seat eight to ten observers and reporters. The roof, exterior cladding, door and windows were all designed to save Howe money over the years. Construction, set up and trim were completed with the twelve week lead time.
