

Whitley - Redford press box

Redford High School

Redford is a medium-sized public school in a Detroit-area city of the same name. While Redford has a strong sports program, the most visible use of their field comes from a shared relationship with national high school football powerhouse, Redford Catholic Central. "CC" regular draws 2,500 or more spectators per game, along with gaggles of reporters and observers who follow the nationally ranked team.

Their Need

The old press box had become a pigeon habitat and little more. The decision was made to build anew and to provide a larger structure within a tight budget and a very short timeline.

Our Solution

The contract was awarded in June and the building had to be completed in time for the first game in early September. It was. Design, production and finish work took about three months. The 40 x 8 building is about twice the size of the old structure and now built weather-tight and comfortable for writers and videographers, alike. The pigeons are gone.
